Composer Notes

On Pentecost Day, the Gospel relates Jesus' gift of the Spirit to the disciples in the locked room: "he breathed on them and said to them, 'Receive the Holy Spirit'" (John 20:22). This gift is anticipated all throughout John's Gospel. As early as chapter three, Jesus tells Nicodemus: "no one can enter the kingdom of God without being born of water and Spirit" (3:5). In chapter 4, Jesus tells the Samaritan woman that the water he shall give will well up to eternal life within the one who receives it (4:14). The passage for Pentecost's Vigil Mass (John 7:37–39) is another example. On the last and "greatest day" of the Feast of Tabernacles, Jesus says: "Let anyone who thirsts come to me and drink. Whoever believes in me, as Scripture says: 'Rivers of living water will flow from within him.'" The evangelist then says that Jesus was referring to the Spirit that would be given to believers once he had been glorified. It is no accident that Jesus makes this proclamation during the Feast of Tabernacles, which involved water rituals. As Suplician Father Raymond Brown (1928–1998) points out: "The crowds have watched the daily water ceremony made with petitions for rain; yet the real source of water from heaven stands in their midst.... And the water is the Spirit to be given in baptism when Jesus has returned to his Father from the cross" (The Gospel and Epistles of John: A Concise Commentary, Colleagueville, MN: Liturgical Press, 1988; 50–51).

Throughout much of Easter season, the pronouncements of Jesus refer to the Father and the Spirit. To abide in the crucified and risen Lord is to share in his Spirit and his union with the Father. One must not understand these relations as merely vertical, because Jesus' love of the Father is embodied in laying down his life for the sheep. He has come to do the will of the One who sent him, which is that he empties himself to save humanity. That is why the love of God and love of human beings (the neighbor) go together. The sort of transcendence proper to the liturgy always moves in both directions: transcendence of self toward God, transcendence of self toward neighbor.

The Communion refrain cites the first part of Jesus' words (also featured in the Communion antiphon in the Roman Missal and Roman Gradual). Verses 1 through 4 are drawn from the other readings; verses 5 through 10 are taken from Psalm 42/43 ("As the deer longs for running streams").
